

Princeton Student Colony* presents:
A public talk by Istanbul based artist CAN ALTAY
Monday, February 20th, 2012 at 6:30pm
In the geodesic orange dome on the New South lawn

Can Altay is a Turkish artist based in Istanbul. His practice traverses the fields of architecture, art, design and social commentary. His work is known for its focus on improvised architectures in the city, unauthorized systems of organization and models of co-habitation. Often taking the form of research projects or mixed-media installations, his work explores and delineates individuals' relationship with their urban environments.

Other upcoming talks include...

(Mondays at 6:30 in the Student Colony orange tent on the New South Lawn unless otherwise noted)

Feb 13th: J. Morgan Puett

Mar 5th: Chip Lord, San Francisco (Ant Farm) - 6pm co-hosted by School of Architecture at Betts Auditorium

Mar 12th: Robby Herbst

Mar, 26th: Lisa Anne Auerbach

The Princeton Student Colony (a PRINCETON ATELIER course) has temporarily domesticated an area of the New South Lawn on the Princeton University campus where we are making ourselves at home, creating an evolving lounge / laboratory / stage / platform / headquarters for the presentation and performance of fundamental human activities often ignored by the academic disciplines, such as cooking, composting, dancing, eating, exercising, gathering, gardening, meeting, moving, napping, performing, recycling, socializing, stretching, talking, walking...*
